

BUY FRESH BUY LOCAL

Chesapeake

CHESAPEAKE BAY
FOUNDATION
Saving a National Treasure

By supporting locally sourced and sustainably grown foods and goods, Buy Fresh Buy Local encourages informed decisions to eat well and preserve valuable farmland. We support the local economy while taking steps to save a national treasure, the Chesapeake Bay.

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Buy Fresh Buy Local is a national organization that connects consumers to fresh, locally grown food through the development of a community-based network. After taking over the Chesapeake chapter in 2010, the Chesapeake Bay Foundation continues to work as the primary coordinator for the regional sector.

Through education on sustainable agriculture, promotional events, and resources such as this guide, the Buy Fresh Buy Local Chesapeake program aims to inform the public on how purchasing locally produced food and goods benefits the health of the Bay, protects farmlands, boosts local economies, and supports our greater community.

The mission of the Buy Fresh Buy Local organization is to increase knowledge of how consuming locally grown and produced goods benefits the environment, economy, and society, and to promote reliable sources of consciously produced products in the region.

Each chapter engages their community through memberships and partnerships with local farms, markets, restaurants, and other businesses. In conjunction with the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's goals of protecting the Bay's health and longevity as a national treasure, Buy Fresh Buy Local Chesapeake encourages the growth of local food systems through the specific lens to "Save the Bay."

MEMBERSHIP AND PARTNERSHIP

INDIVIDUAL MEMBERSHIP

Are you interested in learning more about local foods and products? Do you want to help save a national treasure, the Chesapeake Bay?

Join our local food movement and kickstart the national campaign for promoting access to local food in Maryland!

Visit our website for more details on individual membership, buylocalchesapeake.org.

PARTNERSHIP

Do you know a local farmer, market manager, store owner, CSA distributor, or other businessowner who uses sustainable practices that support Bay health?

Partnerships are available to farmers, farmers markets, restaurants, grocery stores, wineries, breweries, creameries, and CSAs.

Tell them to visit cbf.org/bfbl-partners to learn how they can join Buy Fresh Buy Local!

WHY BUY LOCAL?

Buy Fresh Buy Local Chesapeake works to connect residents of the Maryland Chesapeake region with opportunities to buy locally grown, sustainably produced food.

Buying local food and goods is an investment in bettering the community. Keeping your dollar local supports farmers and artisans employing your neighbors and paying them a fair wage, rather than largescale industrial farms thousands of miles away. Nearly all of the profit earned from locally produced items stays within the local economy, whereas only a few cents on the dollar would if it been produced elsewhere. Jobs created by locally produced food and goods help to foster a more prosperous community.

Locally grown food provides multiple environmental benefits. Sustainable farming operations compliant with best management practices, such as planting 35-foot streamside buffers of native trees and shrubs to absorb runoff of excess fertilizer into waterways, protect water quality and the health of the Chesapeake Bay. Additionally, shipping food thousands of miles releases significant amounts of greenhouse gasses and other air pollutants into the atmosphere.

The Chesapeake Bay airshed extends more than nine times beyond the Bay's watershed, comprising 570,000-square miles across 15 states and Canada. These emissions from food transportation as far away as Kentucky and Indiana contribute to algal blooms, which create devastating oxygen-poor dead zones in the Bay and contaminate waters with heavy metals and pollutants that harm fish and other wildlife. Buying local eliminates the need for transporting food and goods across thousands of miles, significantly decreasing the pollution associated with these products.

Local food also has numerous benefits for public health. With fewer steps between harvest and your table, locally grown food has fewer opportunities for contamination, which promotes a safer food system. Additionally, as produce travels fewer miles between farms and plates, each item has more time to fully ripen before harvest, taking on an unmatched depth of flavor. More delicious fruits and vegetables encourage consumers to give healthy produce a more starring role in their diet.

As we work to promote the health of the Chesapeake Bay, a key piece of the solution includes redefining what it means to be a steward of this national treasure. Every Chesapeake-region consumer's choices affect the health of our waterways and the Bay, therefore education through materials such as this guide and other Chesapeake Bay Foundation programming is paramount to achieving our goals.

FARMERS MARKETS IN MARYLAND

Farmers Markets across the state connect Marylanders with locally sourced produce and goods. Supporting farmers markets allows for greater connection between farmers and consumers while working to lower the expansive carbon footprint of the standard American diet. Produce in the United States travels an average of 1,500 miles from farm to table, greatly affecting nearby air- and watersheds through vehicle emissions and packaging pollution. In the state of Maryland, most farmers markets operate seasonally and offer a range of vendors. Buying from these markets provides easy access to fresh, in-season food, supports local economies, encourages discussion of growing practices between producers and consumers, and promotes the health of the Bay.

CSAS IN MARYLAND

A CSA, or community-supported agriculture, is a system where consumers subscribe to a share of a farmer's harvest, receiving produce on a weekly or biweekly basis throughout the growing season. CSA members invest upfront, which helps farmers offset the sometimes-unpredictable costs associated with their operation. These shareholders are investing in production, not product, claiming fiscal responsibility for both the risks, which include bad crop seasons and pest infestation, as well as the reward: the harvest. CSA shares typically run spring through fall, with signups available just ahead of the first harvest and often continuing into the start of the season.

LOCAL RESTAURANTS

Eating sustainably and dining out have not always come hand in hand. However, recently, many restaurants have placed greater emphasis on sourcing their ingredients locally. These farm-to-table restaurants allow patrons to support sustainable farming practices and the local economy while out for a meal. Farm-to-table restaurants catalyze connections between local growers, artisans, and consumers through a meal.

WINERIES

Maryland's unique microclimate gives local wines distinct and delicate flavors. Across four growing regions, the broad varieties of grapes yield wines unlike anywhere else in the United States.

BREWERIES

The local food movement also drives a market for farm-to-glass beer, utilizing local ingredients grown on the farm to brew unique and bold craft beverages. Buying farm-to-glass beer supports local businesses, reduces the carbon footprint associated with each pint, and increases demand for Maryland-grown produce.

MEAT AND EGGS

Sustainably minded practices in livestock rearing have a myriad benefits for the planet and the health of the Bay and its waterways. Pasture and rotational grazing reduce topsoil erosion, improve soil structure and quality, aid in pollution filtration, and heighten air and water quality. Additionally, a grass-fed diet is also better for the cows, enabling their digestive systems to harness greater nutrient value than from traditional corn or soy feed, strengthening their immune systems and, ultimately, yielding a higher-quality meat product. Additionally, rotational and pasture-based are key components to improving soil quality and protecting the Chesapeake Bay.

The Maryland Grazers Network is led by the Chesapeake Bay Foundation in collaboration with the University of Maryland Extension, the Natural Resources Conservation Service, and Maryland farmers. This network connects experienced beef, dairy, sheep, and poultry farmers with producers looking to expand their practices to be more sustainable and learn more about grazing techniques. The Grazers Network Project Team provides technical assistance and includes experts in pasture and forage management, financial planning, marketing, and funding resources.

With collaboration from Future Harvest Chesapeake Alliance for Sustainable Agriculture, the Maryland Grazers Network provides funds for the Amazing Grazing Directory, which lists over 200 grazers in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and West Virginia.

MARYLAND'S SEAFOOD AND AQUACULTURE

An estimated 90 percent of the world's fisheries are exploited or collapsed. A reverence for the Chesapeake Bay inspires many local fishermen to adopt sustainably minded practices that support fish stocks in the Bay and its waterways.

RIGHT CATCH—Annapolis Maritime Museum

This program recognizes local businesses that source and promote sustainable seafood on their menus. Restaurant partners showcase at least one sustainable, locally sourced seafood option and pledge to not serve either orange roughy or imported shark—two of the most vulnerable populations.

APIARIES

Referred to as the “guardians of the food chain and the biodiversity of our species,” bees play a vital role in our food system, responsible for pollinating one third of all food eaten. The future of our modern food system depends on the stability of their populations. But Colony Collapse Disorder (CCD) threatens population security across the United States, resulting in entire colonies of dead adult bees with no definitive cause. This phenomenon has the power to decimate national food security. Supporting local apiaries helps fund healthy bee colonies and maintain the local food system.

COMMUNITY SPACES & URBAN FARMS

Access to local, fresh foods and spaces to interact with the natural environment, educational opportunities, and community should be available for everyone and can be located outside of traditional rural areas while still having an immense impact. Creating connection between consumer and producer can begin in the dirt, even when that dirt is surrounded by the city. Benefits to urban communities include improving soil health, reducing stormwater runoff into the Bay, and introducing green space to congested areas that in turn, reduces urban heat.
